If you could describe yourself in 5 emojis, what would they be?

What was your best learning experience ever?

At a college visit I was able to participate in a cadaver lab.

What's one thing in the world that you're curious to learn more about?

I am curious about learning about other people's culture and what people truly think of America.

REINFORCEMENT OF POWER

STRUCTURES: Why do our teachers not teach about all of the things Americans did in wars and why don't they also teach us how to handle situations including other forms of racism and misogyny?

...I think that our schools should require classes on racism and misogyny to bring attention to the problems that those things cause.

CONSIDERING DIFFERENT APPROACHES

Key Resource: What schools teach about women's history leaves much to be desired

IN THIS EXAMPLE: I didn't find a school [that is trying to shift this paradigm] but I did find an article about how little the amount about historical women are taught in schools, and the diversity of the women is also very small, with most of the women being Caucasian. This article shows that there is misogyny in schools.

....I did learn from the article that women's history needs to be taught more in schools

“ As of 2017, state and D.C. social studies standards, which set goals for each grade level, obliged K-12 public schools to cover 737 historic figures: 559 men and 178 women (including two fictional characters, Molly Pitcher and Rosie the Riveter. (White, 2019)
